ABOUT

COPIA

VINEYARDS & WINERY

Copia Vineyards is a family-owned estate winery rooted in Paso Robles and shaped by 13 generations of farming heritage in Punjab, India. What began with founders Anita and Varinder Sahi's first life-changing visit to the region became a shared pursuit: to farm exceptional vineyards and create wines that express the character of this remarkable place.

Our mission is to honor the land, our farming traditions, and the community we call home. Through regenerative organic practices and meticulous viticulture, we work in partnership with nature—building healthier soils, cultivating resilient vineyards, and preserving the land for generations to come.

From our two westside Paso Robles estates, we craft Rhône and Bordeaux wines defined by aromatic complexity, textural depth, freshness, and balance. Every bottle reflects our belief that truly great wine begins in the vineyard, carries a distinct sense of place, and brings people together.

COPIA

Founders, Farmers, Winemakers

Copia Vineyards grew from Anita and Varinder Sahi's shared love of wine and respect for the land behind it.

Their paths into wine were distinctly different. Varinder's career in engineering and business took him around the world, deepening his appreciation for wine. Anita brought a background in restaurants and marketing, including experience alongside acclaimed restaurateurs and Michelin-starred chefs. A 2015 trip to Paso Robles brought those paths together. They never really left.

In 2017, the Sahis became stewards of 50 acres in the Willow Creek District. Five years later, they added 26 acres in the Adelaida District. Both vineyard sites feature dramatic slopes, calcareous soils and strong marine influence, producing concentrated fruit with richness and clear varietal character.

Paso's "Oldest" Interns

Varinder and Anita Sahi made their first trip to Paso Robles in 2015—and, in many ways, never left. The following harvest, they returned as self-described "oldest interns," joining the small but mighty team at acclaimed Booker Vineyard.

From the vineyard and crush pad to the cellar, they took on every duty harvest demanded, gaining invaluable hands-on experience and a foundation that would help shape Copia.

SIP CERTIFIED Sustainability in Practice

Winemaking From a Farmer's Perspective

"It's been said many times that you need to start with great grapes to make great wine. The degree of separation between good and great wine is very small, and that difference happens in the vineyard." – Varinder Sahi

- Minimal-intervention winemaking
- Sustainable and regenerative organic practices
- Modern technology guided by Old World winemaking principles
- Terroir-driven, site-specific wines with quality prioritized over quantity
- Estate-grown grapes, harvested by hand
- Calcareous limestone soils and carefully managed deficit irrigation

Paso Robles Wine Region

- Each AVA in Paso Robles has its own unique microclimate. Copia is situated in both the Willow Creek District and the Adelaida District.
- The Western Paso Robles districts are closer to the Pacific Ocean which allows for diurnal temperature swings between 35-50 degrees Fahrenheit – the greatest in California.
- In California, Paso Robles is one of the largest areas of concentrated calcareous soil deposits and one of the few places with heavy limestone soils.

The Estate Vineyards

Willow Creek District AVA

Copia's Willow Creek Estate was established and planted in 2019. The vineyard comprises approximately 20 planted acres across 22 distinct blocks, with six grape varieties.

- Topography: Mountainous bedrock slopes in the Santa Lucia Range, reaching approximately 1,300 feet in elevation
- Climate: Strong marine influence, with cooling winds and fog moving inland through the Templeton Gap. Warm days and cool nights create a pronounced diurnal shift that helps preserve acidity and extend the growing season.
- Soils: Predominantly calcareous loams and clay loams formed over Monterey Formation bedrock

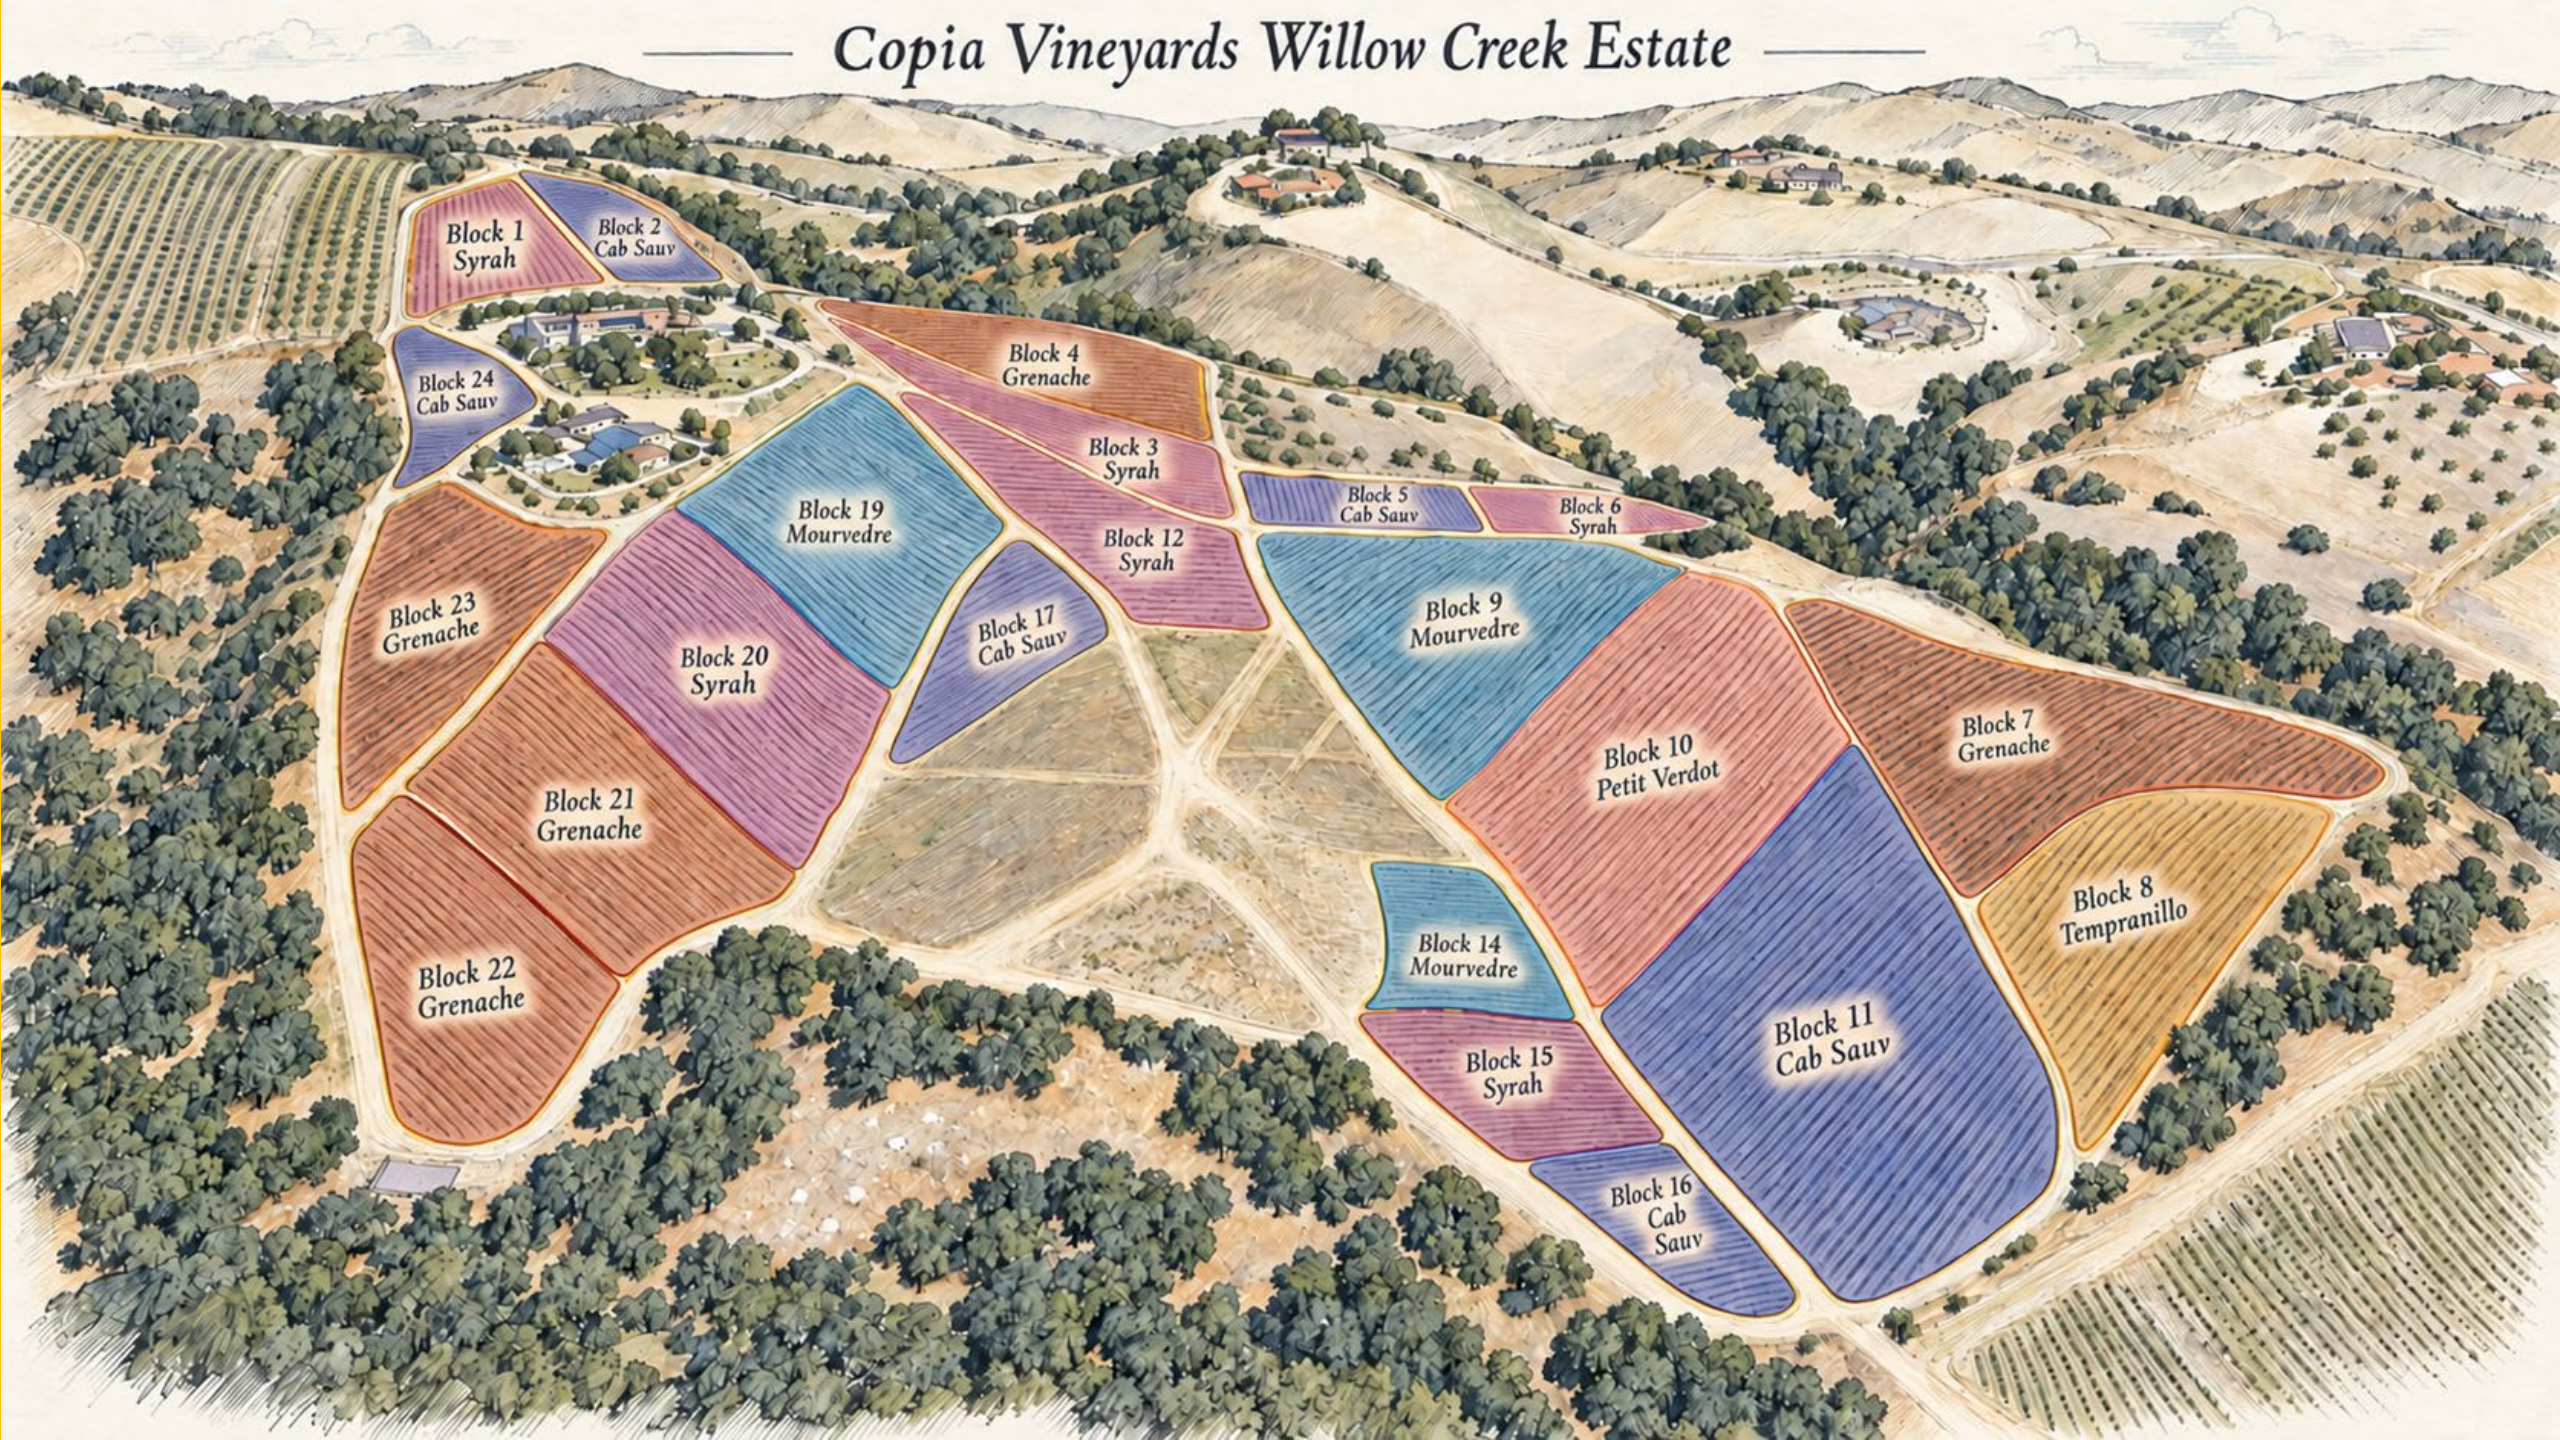

Adelaida District AVA

Copia acquired its 26-acre Adelaida Estate in 2022 and planted approximately 20 acres in 2024. The vineyard is divided into 17 distinct blocks and planted to 12 grape varieties.

- Topography: Situated in the northwesternmost district of Paso Robles, on mountainous slopes of the Santa Lucia Range. Estate elevations range from approximately 940 to 1,250 feet
- Climate: The Adelaida District generally accumulates more growing-season heat than neighboring Willow Creek. Warm days and a 30–40°F diurnal range support full ripening, while cooler nights help preserve acidity and freshness.
- Soils: Uplifted ancient marine sedimentary bedrock with shallow, largely calcareous soils and abundant limestone

Stewardship in Practice

Rooted in 13 generations of farming in India, the Sahi family follows a principle passed down through generations: the land should receive the same care and respect as a mother. Copia is working toward organic certification and Regenerative Organic Certified® status for both estate vineyards.
Our practices include:

- Willow Creek Estate Vineyard earned SIP Certified® status in 2020

- Sustainable farming practices across both estate vineyards
- Lower-impact packaging with no foil capsules, biodegradable corks, materials selected for recyclability or reuse

- Native plantings, estate gardens, beehives and wildlife corridors that support pollinators and other wildlife

- Organic farming practices that prioritize soil health and vineyard biodiversity

In The Press

"If these first releases are any indication, the future is very bright for this team." – Jeb Dunnuck

"Varinder and Anita Sahi's Copia, inspired by a road trip to Paso Robles in 2015 and founded two years later, is one of the names to watch in the region." -Ray Isle, Food & Wine Magazine

"That westside expression—characterized by limestone-rich soils, diurnal temperature shifts, and small-berry concentration—is central to Copia's identity. Each wine, whether from estate fruit or select partner vineyards, is meant to reflect both place and precision…At the heart of Copia's evolution is a dual devotion—to the land and to the people who share their table." – Lisa Perrotti-Brown, The Wine Palate
